The Way of All Flesh is a semi-autobiographical novel by Samuel Butler which attacks Victorian-era hypocrisy. Written between 1873 and 1884, it traces four generations of the Pontifex family. It represents a relaxation from the religious outlook from a Calvinistic approach, which is presented as harsh. Butler dared not publish it during his lifetime, but when it was published it was accepted as part of the general revolution against Victorianism. The author depicts an antagonistic relationship between Ernest and his hypocritical and domineering parents. His aunt Alethea is aware of this relationship, but dies before she can fulfil her aim of counteracting the parents' malign influence on the boy. However, shortly before her death she secretly passes a small fortune into Overton's keeping, with the agreement that once Ernest is twenty-eight, he can receive it. As Ernest develops into a young man, he travels a bumpy theological road, reflecting the divisions and controversies in the Church of England in the Victorian era. Easily influenced by others at university he starts out as an Evangelical Christian and soon becomes a clergyman, which leads to more problems in his life. Heading in a downward spiral Ernest ends up in prison for sexual assault. In due course Ernest becomes twenty-eight, and receives his aunt Alethea's gift. He returns to the family home until his parents die and he becomes an author of controversial literature. Samuel Butler was an iconoclastic Victorian author who published a variety of works. Two of his most famous pieces are the posthumous novel The Way of All Flesh and Erewhon. Samuel studied at the University of Cambridge in England at the end of his graduation he became a famously known author. He lived till the age of 66 and passed away in 1902. His legacy still lives on today.
