With the help of my guide, youll be able to walk confidently into any situation, without having to deal with proving your intelligence and abilities to those you come in contact with. But first, let me tell you a story of how I was able to overcome my own obstacles I have always considered myself a relatively intelligent person, at least that is what Ive been told over the years. I left school at age 15, immediately entering full time employment. I never took the opportunity to go to college or get a university education. Instead, I preferred to teach myself about the world around me by reading books, learning from others and experimenting. Growing up I was never afraid of hard work and was always ready to demonstrate my commitment and abilities. By my mid twenties, I was becoming bored with my job and I came to the realization that it was my lack of formal education that seemed to be holding me back from progressing in my career. I felt this was extremely unfair given that I believed I was just as smart and capable, if not more so, than my fellow peers. My peers seemed to receive preferential treatment, getting all the promotion opportunities before I got a sniff at them. In other words, I was always at the back of the line. Growing increasingly frustrated, I frequently took my issues to my managers, trying to convince them that I was perfectly capable of progressing if given the chance... it was all to no avail. When I reached 25 years, people were joining the firm fresh out of university and were getting respected, paid far more and appeared to be enjoying much more success than I, both at work and in their personal lives. I was unhappy and dissatisfied by the way I was being treated, overcome by a feeling of total inadequacy. My personal life began to suffer as a result and I became depressed, I felt like a loser on the road to nowhere yet deep down I knew that how I was feeling towards myself was all wrong and so I decided to do something about my situation. I didn't want to go through the motions of studying, writing essays and taking examinations to get a degree. Please don't get me wrong, I'm in no way devaluing anyone's academic achievements, I greatly admire those who have achieved academic success, I just never felt it was for me. I wanted to do something that took less time, something that I enjoyed, and ultimately, something that would make the world notice me and start taking me seriously. Just like everyone else, I wanted to get ahead in life I wanted to be noticed and I wanted people to realize that being intelligent and competent wasn't reserved solely to those who had a university education. Indeed, some of the most successful people in the world never went to college or university. I started thinking about what I could do to get myself off the road to nowhere and on to the road to success. That's when, while one day looking for IQ puzzles on the Internet that I could print out and take to occupy me for an upcoming train journey, that I stumbled upon the idea of taking the Mensa IQ test excited and wondering whether this could be the answer to my situation, I began to investigate. At this point I did know what Mensa was and also knew that a lot of other people knew what it was too, but I had no idea of how widely regarded being a member of Mensa was, and, how challenging it was to actually pass the Mensa entrance test (Looking back I think this is why being a member of Mensa is significant and says something about you as a person. It is a significant achievement to become a member). I decided at that moment that I wanted to take the test. I thought that if I could pass the Mensa test and become a member it would not only be a great boost to my confidence but also open doors in my life. I booked myself to take the Mensa test and then set out, in my usual approach to challenges in life, looking for information that would help me prepare for taking the test and improve my chances of success to me, failure wasn't an option. What did I find? Snippets of information here and there - nothing in one place, that comprehensively detailed how to approach the task. So I began a journey of discovery, learning as much as I could about... The things us humans can do to improve mental performance. Looking in detail at the various types of IQ questions and how they are presented And most importantly, how to tackle answering them. I must have read over twenty books on my journey... it was hard work but fun. The rest is history. After taking on board all that I had learned through my research, with determination, a positive attitude and diligent preparation, I finally took the Mensa test. Not only did I pass it (to pass the test, you need to obtain a passing score that shows you have an IQ in the top 2 of the population), I achieved a passing score that put me in the top 1 of the population. As you can imagine, I was thrilled when I achieved this, but it wasn't without hard work. I updated my resume and included an entry that stated that I was a member of Mensa along with my IQ score from the test. I went on and bore you in detail on how my life improved after achieving this but suffice it to say my life improved dramatically: doors that were once closed were opened, I noted a marked improvement in how people treated me (they seemed to have a newfound respect that wasn't there before), my confidence soared, dissipating my feelings of inadequacy and I also experienced a transformation in my personal life too. So after I was able to successfully pass the Mensa test. I decided Why Not Make The Ability To Stand Out In A Crowd And Break Through That Glass Ceiling Available To Everyone!!!
