The wild thing she saved is the man she'll desire most. A Ghost Cats story. Eve Matthews, head veterinarian at Jameson Wildlife Rescue and Preserve, measures success by no one's rules but her own-much to her rich parents' distress. A life filled with animals means she's rarely alone. Still, a little human contact of the male variety would be nice. The only one in her life right now is Midnight, a black panther she brought back from the brink of death. She doesn't think twice about bringing him home to keep an eye on him. Changing clothes in front of his golden eyes. Confessing her deepest fantasies to his alert ears. It's not as if he'll ever tell anyone her secrets. Forced to watch her every move, listen to her every word, Viktor is in torment, trapped in panther form while he heals. He aches to fill her nights with the pleasure she craves, but to shift too soon risks death. Until the night she pleasures herself, and he can take no more. They come together in a cataclysm too fierce to be a dream. But the shifter who left Viktor for dead is drawing near, determined to finish the job he started. This book has been previously published Warning: Contains a voyeuristic cat shifter, a heroine who's an exhibitionist unaware, and explicit sex that may just give you cat scratch fever. Iced catnip tea recommended.
