The San Francisco Bay Guardian calls them "A wonder-producing quintet - they drum, they dance, they chant, they slap and pat their torsos and limbs, they make visual music that fills a room with physical excitement." The five members of the ensemble bring with them a multitude of influences - from body music, jazz, Afro-Cuban and West African drumming - to Balinese gamelan, South Indian solkatu, and the music of the Middle East, Japan and the Caribbean. Loud, rowdy, athletic, playful, subtle, delicate and ethereal - their sounds and movement are fluently integrated, enabling us to see music and hear dance. "...a crossing of cultures, a blurring of boundaries at its most sensitive, most humanistic, and most magical." National Public Radio "If you like what Bobby McFerrin did to the voice, you will love what Crosspulse does to the drum." Dirty Linen Crosspulse was brought together by Keith Terry in 1992 in the San Francisco Bay Area.
