Details: Namgar, the singer from the family line of white shamansIn the heart of Siberia, under bottomless blue sky, there the songs sung by Namgar were born. She is a daughter of the steppe, born to a cattle herder whose line included the darkhasha craftsmen and white shamans. She masters the mysteries of the great wide open, voices of spirits of mountains and forests. Love to the melodies sung by her granny and her father, the wish to maintain the tradition that is becoming extinct, brought her on festival stages around the world. She sings long songs and yokhor dance tunes, uliger legends of mighty champions, precise arrows, and swift horses, just as they used to sing ages ago, with music arranged so that the jewels of her singing were accessible on world music stage. Namgar has been the cult Buryat singer for people in Buryatia and Mongolia, and beyond in East Siberia.
