So this is the final product and I hope you like it and Im working on the 2nd album of our stuff right now. And I just got off a short tour with the dudes and theyre all super cool and really nice and our stuff was (generally) very well received. Oh, also, I should tell you why they were in the Technology section of the Times rather than, say, the Arts section. Well, in addition to their music having a strong connection with Nintendo, there was this other cool technological thing which was that they used this one program (I forget the name of which as of now) which allowed them to strip the audio off of the old cartridges as NSFs (Nintendo Sound Files) and break them down into their individual tracks (one drum track, three treble tracks, and one for sound effects and/or samples) and slow them way down which is how and/or partly why they are able to play this shit so faithfully. So, thats the story; buy our music. Love, Grammar
