With Kottonmouth Kings and Garth Vader providing music, "Urban Street Bike Warriors" offers viewers an inside look at the lifestyle behind the sport. "My goal was to show it exactly as it is," Stone attests. "Some of these guys are really hard; there's a scene with drugs and guns - we didn't want to shy away from any of it." Stone, who is partnered with brother Evan in their Stone Brothers operation, acknowledges that they have a lot to live up to; "Urban Street Bike Warriors" is their second foray into tracking extreme motorcycle sportsmen across the freeways and back roads of America to document their death-defying stunts. It follows the film "12 O'Clock," also a winner of multiple Xtremey Awards.
