"Half Baked sings the Century Of Foam for your pleasure" Based in Montreal, Half Baked doesn't like spending too much time between releases. A year has passed since 2007's Half Baked Vs The Ghost Underground, a mixture of everything from the Death From Above 1979 inspired garage attacks to sound collages and acoustic romantic ballads filled with ninjas and cigarettes. A year spent performing weekly shows in the Quebec province, in parties or supporting bands like Montrealers We Are Wolves, Aids Wolf, Florida's Yip-Yip, Toronto's Opopo, and more. But a year was enough to cook the follow up. At the opening night of this year's aptly titled Pop Montreal festival (by playing early and first the band technically opened the fest), the duo formed by Aaron Maiden and Tototo Pwell was releasing its fourth and most accessible album to date, Half Baked sings the Century Of Foam for your pleasure. A short and precise rock album full of auto-tuned hooks, drums abuse and distorted bass, inspired by German polemic philosopher Peter Sloterdijk. It happened on October 1st, at Cabaret Mado, a place popular for its drag-queen shows, in the gay district. On that night, Half Baked went Pop and the album release was a success. It is the album that you are holding in your hands. We hope you like it.
