ELECTRONIC: Industrial, ROCK: Goth Details: Review from atome: "...his experimental and ambient album similar to Octagon Man's productions combines with skilfulness electronic music, acoustic elements and industrial sounds for a dark and interesting result..." Review from GetUnderground: "...This make is RETARDED! I'm still trying to figure out whether upstart Res Freq Recordings are the craziest beatheadz alive, or the most brilliant... This one [Bones Domingo] is an eclectic project that mixes dirty electronic beats and programming with a wide array of live acoustic and electric instruments. Blips bleeps zips zaps thumpz squelch zibit zobit buzz humm sizzle slurp..." Review from ChainDLK: "... Bones Domingo, a music project that draws from acoustic and electric instrumental as well as computer music, taking the word "heterogeneous" to a whole new level... If you like recordings with extreme variations and a wide range of influences from all over the place, Bones Domingo is for you. It goes from electronic beats to industrial music, from metal to classical strings orchestrations, you have it all. It's a little hard to keep a solid perspective about this record with all the things going on (not to mention to file it under one of our categories), but I remember the days I was a huge fan of bands that wouldn't stop at anything and would always go a step further and bring together as many influences as they possibly could or felt inspired by.
