Combining hard rock influences with World music instrumentation proved to be a wise investment and resulted in a completely different sound. Hyaline consists of Danny Timko, Dan Fowler, and Aaron Broughton. Metal and punk influences build the foundation of the band's compositions. These three have played, recorded, and toured together with a variety of bands. Although these bands received label recognition, it wasn't until the addition of violin, flute and other world music instrumentation that their sound in their minds began to take shape. Hyaline has now become what is described as one of the industry's more "intelligent" rock bands. Blending a rich background of classical violin and flute with aggressive sound experimentation has taken Hyaline beyond the boundaries of modern rock. It is an edgy and beautiful mix that at one moment brings out the "urge deep inside to mosh" and the next moment finds you "...seduced by the sensual sound of a Siren's song." After playing to a packed house for their CD release party at the Roxy on Sunset, Hyaline continues to build an impressive following throughout California from San Diego to San Francisco. Hyaline is currently in discussions with several major labels, and video production has begun for the song, "Candy Jar". This is only the beginning for this groundbreaking and innovative new band.
