The figurehead and frontman, Fox Salehi, is quarter English, a quarter Irish, and half Persian. His love of travel, soccer, food, and women were eventually superseded by his passionate and peaceful political beliefs, which he channeled through his greatest love of all: his music. Fox played live shows in Washington D.C. and Oxford, UK while attending University, and then while playing gigs during the summer of 2005 in Buffalo, NY, met Brent Persia. Reunited in the winter of 2006, Brent and Fox spent nine months working on two CDs worth of blistering new material that became "Changing History..." The Fox solo acoustic show is haunting and unforgettable. The duo show rocks. The full band live show (4 or 5 piece) is a must-see extravaganza, utterly intense and equally viable in a small club or restaurant, or in a huge arena or sold-out stadium. It has to be seen to be believed. Fox is looking for additional full or part time musicians in order to play even more dynamic and intense live shows. Elipsus'... messages of peace and inspiring and haunting harmonies were made to be heard by many. At times soaring, spectacular, memorable, and meaningful, this music is viable to every listener in the world in every part of the world. It is meant to be heard by a great many people, not just a niche or western audience. In the words of Fox: "Too many people are giving up on the radio and what they describe as the repetitive and formulaic pop music scene. Elipsus... is not limited to what is popular and is not afraid to traverse all genre boundaries and be outspoken and controversial. We say what we believe, and we play the most beautiful music we can imagine. We don't care whether it is cool, and we don't mind about the backlash to our highly controversial but absolutely peaceful politics. In my dreams, this music can change the world and through playing it in every country of the world, I can share the peace and joy and pain and bittersweet emotions in my soul and the message of living freely, without prejudice or exploitation of others, with everyone, everywhere. I think this music can appeal to the whole world, and I will go anywhere, and do whatever it takes, to reach the world with these songs." Elipsus believes above all in 4 things: freedom, democracy, peace, and equality. That is why, even now, this music contains not only emotional and harrowing love songs, but also songs about travelling all over the world... the fact that people are the same wherever you go... the bittersweet nature of life itself and the philosophical questions that we are afraid to ask... songs promoting equality, protesting the widening poverty gap and the society neglecting those near or below the poverty line or in the third world... songs against war and prejudice, regardless of the excuse... songs inspiring people to open their minds... basically songs that reflect every tiny ounce of passion, conviction and belief we have. Elipsus... believes that every person and place and creature on this earth deserves respect and love; and that every human being, regardless of colour, gender, nationality, gender, political orientation and sexual orientation, deserves the same rights and deserves an equal amount of respect as everyone else. We do not trust our government any more than we trust anyone else's, and we don't think there is ever a good enough reason to kill a human being. Perhaps our most important belief is that "they", whoever they may be, are the same as "us". It is that simple. We may think they evil or brainwashed or highly misguided, while they may also think we are evil, but there are no good guys and bad guys in the real world... there is no right and wrong... We must realize this, if we are all to live and survive together. Nothing Elipsus... produces is ever, anything short of real, and although songs like "Fantasy" and our playful rap song about a cat "Anderson Brown" show that we are not afraid to poke fun at ourselves and have a laugh, we are also a very intense and serious band, deeply invested in our lyrics as well as the catchy tunes and haunting sounds that capture our fans' attention.
