The musicians themselves call their style firefolk. The bands composition is unique: the temperamental trombone together with the Estonian bagpipes produce amazing sound patterns. Duduks deep southern tones bring in more distant melodies and the dialogue with the northern horn sweeps away even the last shadows of cultural barriers. The melancholy accordion balances and ties the wind and percussion instruments (djembe, tarbuka and buhalo) together. This results in fiery non-Nordic masculine energy that cannot but impress everyone. Svjata Vatra is like a sizzling campfire, giving light and warmth yet burning no one.
