"Lotus Mind" is a collection of improvisations based on raga scales from North Indian classical music. There is no conscious attempt to render the raga in its traditional expression, form or style, but rather, the scale and feeling are a jumping-off place for a musical conversation between the artists. Bhler and Moskow recorded this collection in a process of discussing and refining their interplay. Finally they improvised together, building up a spacious instrumental music, driven by the mysterious blending of clarinet and sarod. Under the name Sojourn sarodist Lisa Moskow and clarinetist Hermann Bhler play their original music between Jazz and Indian Music since 1992. Playing and performing with various world music percussionists, including Geoffrey Gordon, Amit Thakur and Rami Ziadeh, Sojourn has performed several tours in California, Switzerland, Italy and Mexico. Bhler and Moskow released their first album "Sojourn" in 1996, a fusion of Jazz and Indian music. The music of Sojourn is based on distinctive rhythmic cycles, exotic scales and ostinatos. From the beginning Bhler and Moskow have woven improvisation into the fabric of their music so as to breathe new life into each performance. As a result the musical wizardry of Bhler and Moskow expresses itself with easy elegance. The surprise is that two composers/musicians from different backgrounds (and continents) create such a coherent body of music. The playing of Hermann Bhler and Lisa Moskow reflects their backgrounds, Bhler as a major player in the European improvisational and new music scene and Moskow as a veteran musician of the North Indian classical tradition. These diverse elements are seamlessly fused together in the music of the two musicians. As such Sojourn has come to be a part of World Beat, Jazz or East-West Fusion Music - an
