The first attempts to compose music on computer were done with Scream Tracker in 1994. Since Michael had no music education it was not easy. By following the trial error method he learned a little about music theory. At that period he was hardly influenced by Jean Michel Jarre and early 90s dance bands like Dr. Alban, Snap and more. A few years later he found a world of midi music and had understand that this is the way to create real music. In 2000 Michael purchased his first serious equipment - Roland XP-30 synthesizer. During all that time he had also improved piano playing skills by self teaching. At this period the muse come mostly from Vangelis and Enigma. In 2000 Michael joined mp3community and his music was ranked pretty high on the charts. Unfortunately, in 2003 the site was shut down by CNET, after purchasing the domain name. All the music was written with XP-30 and Voyetra Digital Orchestrator Plus until 2003, when Michael in addition to Roland started making music with Steinberg Cubase and VST plugins. He is working with this equipment till now. These days, in addition to composing, Michael is learning to play piano and guitar because he believes it is the bottleneck in his music writing. In the beginning of 2008 Michael upgraded his small studio with Virus B synthesizer and it became his main instrument for the latest tracks.
