An autoresponder is a program setup to send back a particular email message in response to an email that either mentions a particular topic in its subject line or is addressed to a particular user or alias name. Autoresponders can be used for some of the following purposes: o send back information (on a vacation package, product, etc) if an email is sent in that mentions that product in its subject line. o send back general information on your business if an email comes in addressed to info@yourdomain.com. Because Intersessions uses Procmil, an extremely flexible email processing program, two forms of autoresponders can be created and even combined. The first looks at the subject line of an incoming email. If the subject line matches your criteria then a responding text message is sent back. The second form looks at the To: address. If this address matches certain criteria a responding text message is sent back. This video tutorial explains in details. No Restriction PLR Is Included With This Video Series!
