His first performance was at age 7; formal piano lessons began shortly thereafter, and at age 11 he presented his first solo piano recital. He continued his classical piano studies while learning guitar, bass, drums, trumpet, baritone horn, and tuba. At the University of Massachusetts in Amherst he studied piano, voice and composition, all the while exploring the facets forms of different styles of modern music; after leaving college, his focus shifted from performing to composing. Hes since released four full-length CDs of his own compositions, with several more recordings to be released in 2008. Adams experiences as a musician transcend the boundaries of a typical classical pianist. Hes performed with over 20 bands ensembles in the past five years, playing everything from classical, jazz, folk and world music to funk, blues, country, reggae, hip-hop, rock and heavy metal as a bassist, drummer, keyboardist, percussionist, vocalist, and trumpet player. His travels as a freelance rock n roll musician taught him invaluable lessons which he would later incorporate into his work as a classical pianist composer. While his versatility as a performer allows him the luxury of being able to write original music in any style, Adams true passion as a composer is combining his various influences to create musical fusion which blends tradition modernity in a way thats accessible to the listeners ears. In particular, his work with the ensemble Complex-I features his original fusion of classical, heavy metal, jazz progressive rock; the long-awaited debut CD Music For Mother Earth is due for release in December 2007. In addition to his extensive performance schedule as a classical pianist, Adam works as a freelance composer, arranger, studio musician, producer consultant throughout New England.
