His mother, a concert pianist and his father, a painter/opera singer. As a child, he and his parents moved around the world almost continuously, spending time all over the United States, Europe, Canada, and a series of islands including Tahiti and Grand Cayman. No matter how the environment was changing, music was the constant in his family and life. At the age of five, Thomas landed a singing gig for a commercial which led to a young acting career, during which he has appeared in numerous television series and films, a position he still carries today. But it was always music that was Thomas' first passion and prime directive in life. While living in an area of Canada that experienced extremely harsh weather conditions in the winter, Thomas, in his own words, became a "nature obsessed recluse" who at age ten, began writing pieces of classical music by humming different instrumental layers into a loop/playback track dictaphone. "I was raised almost entirely on dramatic classical music like Chopin, Beethoven and Shostakovitch. It was my main focus when I started writing songs." By the age of fifteen, enrolled in a homeschooling program, Thomas landed a record deal, which after working on eight songs with producers, Thomas would walk away from, believing he was contributing little more than lyrics to the project and that his true musical vision was being altered by his collaborators. At the age of sixteen, Thomas began writing and producing songs entirely by himself that infused the drama and musical intricacies of classical with the sound scape and aesthetics of electronica. "The only way I can really think to describe my music, is a kind of "electrofolk". Songs that have a traditional melodic and chord structure, often telling stories, but technically supported by electronica. I guess I'm trying to harness nature and technology in a symbiotic way." He would go on to build his own home studio in the desert town of Palmdale, CA. where he would write, record, produce, mix and master all eleven tracks for his first album "Psyanoctic". "Psyanoctic is really an introduction to myself from myself in many ways. It's a little bit of a private album, I think. I'm kind of keeping a lot of my opinions on things outside of myself a secret still." The album was completely written, composed, produced, mixed and mastered by Thomas himself. Despite continuing with his busy acting career, appearing on television shows such as Fox's Terminator: The Sarah Connor Chronicles, he has also completed a second album currently titled Protean. Thomas also composed a song "The Future", which is dedicated to his Terminator: The Sarah Connor Chronicles character John Connor.
