Blending Classical, Rock, and a wide variety of ethnic influences, Trillian Green developed a unique style sound, often described as "lushly melodic, with medieval, middle eastern celtic flavors." The group originally gelled at The Oregon Country Fair (1994), and rapidly progressed from street performing to coffee houses clubs, to large-scale festivals theaters throughout the Northwestern US California. After 4 years of rigorous touring, the group disbanded in 1998, and Jarrod Kaplan (Trillian Green percussionist) moved on to perform with HANUMAN, and then TAARKA (currently performing). CD Bio: The band's 2nd release, entitled "Metamorphoses" was produced by Mark Nichols (producer/arranger for Sub-Pop recording artists Jeremy Enegk, The Walkabouts) and co-produced by Todd Fogelsonger of Crystal Park (live productions of The Presidents of The United States of America, Joan Jett, among others). Metamorphoses captures the sensation of Trillian Green's live performance, with the power of their sound and crafty musicianship. "A master work and epic musical journey."
