One of the first fully programmable polyphonic analog synths the Prophet 5 is the most classic synthesizer of the eighties. It is capable of a delightful analog sound unique to Sequential's Prophet series in which the P5 was King. Five voice polyphony - two oscillators per voice and a white noise generator. The analog filters, envelope, and LFO all sound great and are extremely flexible. The P5 had patch memory storage as well which scanned and memorized every knob setting for storing and recalling your sounds - a desperately needed feature at the time. The P5 lacked MIDI, a feature that came later on the P5 spin-off the Prophet 600. But it is still loved even today for its great string sounds, analog effects, and punchy analog basses. Unfortunately, the P5 is not immune to the dark side of vintage synths - it has its fair share of analog synth problems such as unstable tuning, it's difficult to repair, lacks MIDI, etc. The P5 has been used by Kraftwerk, Duran Duran, No Doubt, Depeche Mode, Vince Clarke, Talking Heads, Peter Dinklage, Genesis, Gary Numan, Thomas Dolby, New Order, Prodigy, INXS, The Cars, Phil Collins, Richard Barbieri, Hall & Oates, Jean-Michel Jarre, Sneaker Pimps, Steely Dan, Kitaro, Level 42, the Eurythmics, Pet Shop Boys, Vangelis, George Duke, filmmaker/composer John Carpenter, and many more.
