On this third release with his trio mg3, Gasselsberger, on one hand, creates easy floating instrumentals, that are built around but a few notes, which he manages to give an almost mysterious flair as he approaches a Fazioli grand piano. On the other hand, the trio is really cooking when Gasselsberger starts improvising in some kind of soul-jazzy way on top of the driving beats laid down by bass player Roland Kramer and drummer Gerald Endstrasser. The tight trio interprets only originals written by band-leader Gasselsberger, who for his previous releases, got compared with greats like Keith Jarrett, Esbjörn Svensson or Abdullah Ibrahim. I wanted these compositions to be a reflection of the tension between my going inside and my pushing to the outside. The place where it's happening is the momentary state of my musical development - it's the current moment between consciousness and wanting to break out - to discover the endless spaces of the music-world , says Gasselsberger to give us an inside view, regarding these recordings.
